COOPER TALKS TO FATHERS AND SONS

TO PREACH AGAINST WAR

Sermon Next Sunday Night Will Be on "The Real Meaning of Armistice Day."

Preaching yesterday morning to an audience composed largely of fathers and sons and including about sixty members of the local chapter of the Order of DeMolay, the Rev. Joseph A. Cooper urged upon the sons that instead of merely paying a pretty tribute to their fathers that they take thought of the kind of life they would like them to lead. Upon the fathers he urged the setting of a good example and the holding of the ideal of service.

The theme of his sermon was "The Father and the Son," and the text was "Know ye not that I must be about my father's business?

Talking especially to the boys, he said:

"Perhaps more than we realize, our fathers set ideals for us. We sometimes forget the toil that has been theirs and the sacrifice that has been theirs, and it is well to take time as we do this week to think about it. But instead of paying tribute to father, perhaps the best expression of our gratitude is to take thought of the sort of life he would have us live and the kind of work he would have us do.

"The most perfect relationship between fathers and sons is that between the Master and him whom he called Father. The essence of that relationship, the way in which Jesus expressed the business which was to attend to, was that it was to be service. What he said nineteen hundred years ago is still true today. The keyword today is still service, whether in business or education or church life or politics.

"It is the obligation of every young man to find out how he can best serve. To see how he can best carry out his father's business. There is a piece of work for everybody to do which will not be done unless he does it. And there is a sort of work which everybody can do better than he can do something else, and it is our business as young men to find out that business, if it may be found out."

Mr. Cooper took as an illustration the contest of David and Goliath. David refused the shield and helmet and sword of Saul, because he said he had not proved them, and went to battle with his sling. That was his method of warfare, and he could not successfully use somebody else's method.

"After we find out what our business is," he continued, "what the work is that we can best do in terms of service, we are to do it with our might. The people who have done great things in the way of service have done them with a passion for that service. The Lord never calls a lazy man to do something for him, whether it be Moses or Paul or whether it we Wilson, whom he called from his professor's chair, or Harding, whom he took from the editor's desk.

"If it may not be possible for us to find out exactly what our great gift or talent for service, we must do the thing that comes to hand to do, choosing the thing that will challenge all the best powers of our bodies and minds and spirits, with the understanding that we do it, not because it is our business, but because it is the Father's business."

Next Sunday night, the Rev. Mr. Cooper will preach on "The Real Meaning of Armistice Day." It will be a companion sermon to the addresses he will give at the high school Thursday afternoon and at the College Friday morning, when he will discuss the armament conference and the possibility of averting future wars. He will speak at Hopkins Friday afternoon, Armistice Day. The midweek service at the First Baptist church will also be devoted to prayers for peace.

VICE-PRES. WRITES THANKSGIVING MESSAGE

A LIVING FOR EVERYBODY

Figures On Unemployment Are Uncertain and Exaggerated, Coolidge Believes

"There is money enough in America, there are brains enough and the only thing that is lacking is a common purpose to join together in doing the work of the nation.

Calvin Coolidge, Vice-President of the United States, is sending this Thanksgiving message to the workers of the United States through "Trained Men," magazine of inspiration published by the International Correspondence Schools.

"There are no rewards without effort," Mr. Coolidge stated. "There is no substitute for hard work, and no prosperity for the individual without saving.

"There is a living for everybody that will go out and take it. Success will lie not in waiting for the impossible, but in accepting at once the possible.

"There is a great deal of discussion and a growing concern over the supposedly large amount of unemployment. The Secretary of Labor has reported that there are between five and six million people who are not now employed where they formerly were employed.

"This statement has been given prominence, and the qualifications of it which were made by the Secretary have been ignored.

"As a patriotic duty very many entered employment during the war, and attracted by the extraordinary wages just after the war, continued in their occupations. They were, in effect, the surplus labor of the nation which did not ordinarily appear on the pay rolls.

"The fact is that it is impossible at the present time to secure any reliable figures as to the actual amount of unemployment, by which is meant employes who have been and expect to pursue such activities for the purpose of procuring a livelihood and who are unable at the present time to find employment at a reasonable compensation.

"It is well known that there are many who are not working for the reason that they are seeking to get a larger return for their efforts than they have been able to find any one willing to pay.

"While the condition on the whole does not appear at the present time to be serious, it is well to recognize that there has been a tendency in this direction which may become serious if it is not checked.

"For this purpose the conference has been called in Washington more for preventing such a condition from arising than of curing a condition which has already risen."

Not only with relation to the employment situation, but also in the matter of industrial rehabilitation is the Vice-President able to look ahead and see better times.

"It may be proper to remember the resources of America as well as to cast up its liabilities," he said. "It is true that taxes are, and must continue to be high; that burdens of the war are heavy and must be met; that there has been an exhaustion of products, of resources, and of credits: but that there is also another side of this picture.

"The debt of the United States and of its various subsidiaries is a debt to its own people. What is owned by the Government is owned by the people. The debt of the nation is the credit of her people.

"There is a stupendous amount of

MEN AND MONKEYS DISTANT RELATIVES

BUT MAN DID NOT DESCEND FROM APES, SAYS CURL.

BABIES PROVE THEORY

That man has not descended from the monkey but that both man and the monkey have descended from a common primordial form was the distinction made last night by Dr. O. L. Curl in the third of his series of lecture-sermons on evolution at the First Methodist church.

Dr. Curl gave the facts which science advances as proofs of the theory of evolution. Next Sunday he will return to its connection with the Bible, with a sermon on "Science and Salvation."

His sermon last night was as follows:

"Evolution is a broader term than materialism and Darwinism and neo-Darwinism. Evolution, as taught today goes back more nearly to original Darwinism, but recognizes and emphasizes many other forces and methods in the production of the present species of animals. It lays a greater emphasis upon sex selection, conformity to environment, variation and extinction, use and disuse, and mutation, than did Darwinism, while it recognizes the importance of natural selection."

As an illustration of variation and use and disuse of different organs of the body in producing new varieties, Dr. Curl gave the Ancon sheep which, is a variety which descended from a short legged lamb that was born on a farm in New England and used for breeding purposes. The polled Hereford cattle have been produced from a sire which was born on a farm in Kansas from parents with long horns. The hermit crab, which now only has one large pincer, was once possessed of two large pincers, but he backed up into the shell of a mollusk in the bottom of the sea, tucked one of his pincers inside and used the other to guard the entrance to his home. The pincer which was disused has now disappeared. Through these forces and by these methods science teaches that all the different forms of animal life have been produced, the minister said. "Herbert Spencer has defined evolution as a 'continuous change from indefinite, incoherent homogeneity to definite, coherent heterogeneity of structure and function, through successive differentiations and integrations. In its physical aspect, it is, an integration of matter with a concomitant dissipation of force.'

"Insofar as evolution deals with life, it is the simple teaching that man, together with all other forms of life, has descended from a primordial form of life, that this life first appears in the form of the monera, a microscopic mass of living matter resembling the white of an egg. From this has come the protozoons, including the amoebas and the sponges. These have grown in complexity of organization and have ascended through the forms of worms, then fishes, such as the shark and the fishes with lungs, breathing air; then the batrachians or the frog-like animals; then the reptiles; and from the reptiles have been produced, on the one hand the birds, and on the other the quadrupeds. Fossils of extinct birds are on exhibition in the museums with long tails resembling the tail of a snake, but with two feathers projecting from each joint of the tail. "From the quadrupeds have been developed the primates, which include the monkeys and the apes and the men.

Ape Not Man's Ancestor

"From some early man like primate has descended two branches,—the man-like apes on the one hand and men on the other. Mark you that evolution does not teach that men have descended from monkeys but that men and apes have descended from a common ancestor, which stood midway between the two, that he was more highly developed than the apes. All past and present organic beings are arranged within a few great classes in groups subordinate to groups and with the extinct groups often falling in between the now living groups.

"We will look at this subject under three heads: morphology, which is a study of the structure and forms of the body, showing the similarity of

LARGEST CIRCULATION IN NODAWAY COUNTY

LET THE JOB BE SHORT.

The extra session of the Legislature, which opened Friday, should be short and effective for the purpose for which it was called, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Under the Governor's call the Legislature has only two subjects of legislation: Providing for the issue of soldier bonus bonds and the payment of the proceeds to the ex-service men at the earliest possible moment, and providing for the earliest possible issue of the first $10,000,000 of road bonds, so that work on the good roads program may begin next year and the $2,500,000 available from the Federal good roads fund may be used on Missouri roads.

Both of the legislative tasks of the Legislature arise from errors of omission and commission by the legislators themselves. The bonus bill was neglected and there was a blunder in the road bond bill. The Legislature should waste little time and state's money correcting these errors. The ex-service men should get their money without unnecessary delay; the state has voted it. Beginning of big good-roads construction should be pushed. It will reduce unemployment and benefit the state.

Gov. Hyde's expectation that the work of the session will be completed by Armistice Day is fair. We indulge the hope that the Legislature will promptly finish its work and avoid blunders. Corrections are costly.

Better Speech Week.

"Better Speech Week," which lasts from November 6 to 12 is a national movement directed by the National Council of Teachers of English and the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and is sponsored by the American Academy of Arts and Literature and the Society for Pure English.

The purpose of the observance of this week is to impress upon the minds of the American people the importance of speaking pure English. It does not propose in one short week to correct all the evils of poor speech, but it does desire to remind people that they should watch their language every day in every week in the year. It strives to raise the standard, not merely by insisting on correct words and grammatical structures, but also by eliminating poor slang, overused expressions, poorly selected words, and other evils brought about by carelessness and neglect.

In some places the towns as a whole are observing this week, the churches, the schools, the picture shows, the homes, and the individuals. In others the schools are taking the initiative. Every mistake a student hears is written down on a slip of paper, or the one making a mistake is tagged, or some other means is used to check up on the bad English. Whatever the method, it has been noticed in former years that there is an improvement following "Better Speech Week" both in the schools and in the communities.

People who are careful as to their personal appearance and as to the looks of their homes are often neglectful of their speech. It should become a national as well as an individual duty to remedy this. According to Dr. James C. Fernald, the "molding power of our language is a mighty force in shaping the mingled people into one on American soil."

Books and Disease.

Columbia, Mo., Nov. 7.—There is a popular idea that a book which has been handled by a person who has been suffering from a contagious disease, such as diptheria, measles or scarlet fever, will convey the disease to other people. Unquestionably this can take place under certain circumstances. However, very careful investigations demonstrate that the danger is not an acute one, according to Dr. M. P. Ravenel of the School of Medicine of the University of Missouri, president of the American Public Health Association.

During the past year studies have been made on 150 books known to have been handled by persons suffering from diptheria, continued Dr. Ravenel. In no case was the diptheria germ found. Quite frequently the colon germ, which is an inhabitant of the normal intestine, and is very widespread, was found on these books. Where books were purposely infected with germs like typhoid and diptheria, inside the books the germs remain for several months, and those on the outside retain their vitality also, provided the book is kept in the dark. When put in diffuse daylight, such as is obtained in an ordinary well lighted room, these germs are dead at the end of twelve days; on books exposed to direct sunlight they are dead within a few hours. This demonstrates again what has been well known for many years, that sunlight is one of our best disinfectants. It has the power of killing practically every known disease germ in a very short time. It will kill the germ of consumption within a few minutes, provided the germ is not protected in a great mass of mucuous or other material such as is found in the expectorations of consumptives on the sidewalk, but even in such a mass when exposed to sunlight the germ is rapidly killed, seldom being alive longer than 72 hours at the most.

The disinfection of book after being brought from the sick rooms is best carried out, when considered necessary, by the use of formaldehyde gas. The books should be placed in a tight box on their back and room enough allowed to let the book fall partly open. The formaldehyde may then be generated by putting the commercial formalin on cotton in the box or one of the numerous types of disinfectants sold, using solidified formaldehyde.

When all is said, it may be concluded that there cannot be great danger in handling books which have come from sick rooms unless they are obviously soiled with discharges.

It will affect both St. Louis and Kansas City, special dispensation being made in regard to the latter. All other points on the Wabash lines not costing more than $6 one way to Columbia will receive the benefit of the reduced rates. The cut is effective for three days, November 11, 12, and 13. Mr. Eldean received confirmation of this announcement through a telegram from H. E. Watts passenger traffic manager for the Wabash railroad.

In answer to the hundreds of communications being sent to former students and alumni of the state University, replies indicate an unusual number of "old grads" flocking to the Tiger for the great commemoration and homecoming. Many notables have accepted the invitation of Dr. J. C. Jones, acting president of the University, to attend the homecoming and dedication of Missouri's Memorial Union Building. Among them are General Peter Traub, General W. A. Raup, Col. John Parker, Col. W. E. Stayton and other men of America's recent world conflict.

In getting reduced rates, passengers should purchase their tickets to Columbia, and there get a return ticket for half-fare. They should request rates when purchasing their tickets and their receipts will insure getting the reduction on buying return tickets.

Where Are You Going This Winter?

Why don't you take a trip to that charmed land of out o' doors and varied attractions—California?

While California performs no magic, it does rest the weary and refresh the weak. One can be out in the open air and glorious sunshine amongst the fruits and flowers beside the blue Pacific every day—his whole system vitalized and energized, filled with what they call "pep." There's no end of outdoor recreation and pastime possibilities in California.

Instead of being a hardship, the ride is a leisurely, care-free one, if you go via the Burlington. A continuous moving picture of inspiring wonders—farms, factories, interesting towns, fascinating cities, gorges, canyons, rivers, lakes, forests and world-renowned mountains—through Denver (the Paris of America), Colorado Springs (the City of Sunshine), the Pike's Peak region, Pueblo (the Pittsburgh of the West), the Royal Gorge (the most challenging canyon through which a railroad runs), Scenic Colorado, Salt Lake City (the Capital of the Mormons), Great Salt Lake (the mysterious American Dead Sea) and the ninety-mile-long gorge of the Feather River Canyon through the beautiful Sierra Nevada range. Convenient connection at Salt Lake for southern California points.

If you think you can't afford it, analyze the situation and you will change your mind. It costs money to remain at home. Taking this, the delights, comfort and benefits of the trip into consideration, how can you afford not to go? There are comparatively inexpensive hotels, boarding houses and eating places, as well as the palatial kind we hear so much about.

Ask me about the cost of getting there. Reduced round trip tickets, carrying long return limits, liberal stop-over and diverse-route privileges are now on sale.

The Story of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" at Empire

More important than any other photo drama of modern times is "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," Rex Ingram's remarkable picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's great novel which is to be the attraction at the Empire Theater tonight, Tuesand Wednesday and which comes to this city direct from long runs in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

June Mathis, who adapted the immortal Ibanez novel to the screen has been unusually successful. Although "The Four Horsemen" is said to have been read by many millions, a brief synopsis of its action in screen shape cannot fail to be of interest owing to its presentation here.

Madariaga, the Centaur, is an enormously rich old cattle herder of Argentine. Possessing a complex personality, which shows itself in lustful desire, fiery talk with his equals and his subordinates, jealousy hatred, sympathy and love, he is respected and feared as well as loved by the entire countryside. His great ambition is to be as rich as Croesus —to be able to look upon all sides and say to himself or to those who are willing to listen, "I am Lord of all here as far as the eye can reach." Madariaga lives in quarters not in keeping with his vast wealth. He is content to be the ranchman, preferring to live out in the open, with the green beneath and the blue above.

While he has two daughters, his wishes had been always for a son or a grandson who might inherit his vast estates. A day comes when a young Frenchman finds employment with him as overseer—a man who is gifted with a knowledge of finance. Under his supervision the ranch prospers beyond the greatest expectations. He is so successful that the old Centaur grows to love him and finally he is taken into the house as a member of the family. Thrown into constant association with Donna Luisa, Marcello Desnoyers falls in love with her, proposes marriage and is accepted.

One day Madariaga goes to Buenos Ayres to indulge his profligate nature and due to certain circumstances he is compelled to accept a German immigrant, Karl von Hertrott as an employee. Now Karl is as distasteful to the Centaur as Marcello is acceptable. He hates him with a venom beyond expression. But as long as he minds his business and keeps away from close proximity to the testy old Spaniard, he is tolerated. Von Hartott is of the German fatherland. His ambition is to make money enough to return and make his home there. He takes particular delight in painting the advantages of possessing German blood and what the fatherland stands for. Desnoyers tolerates him with his kindly forbearance, even going out of his way to paint him in attractive colors to the old Spaniard.

The time comes when Karl marries the other daughter, Elena. Madariaga had never lost any great love for this daughter and when she marries the thrifty German, his hatred becomes overwhelming. Toward the other daughter he harbors an entirely different feeling. Eventually the German becomes the father of three sturdy sons. While the Frenchman's wife remains childless. The old Centaur, realizing that his days are numbered, does not take kindly to the idea that his vast property will be left to Hartott's offspring. So it is a moment of great rejoicing when finally a son is born to the Desnoyers. He requested that the child be called Julio. The lad grows up to be the apple of the old man's eye. Wherever one is, the other may be found, whether riding over the broad plains or resting at the hacienda. He even takes the boy to Buenos Ayres where the later forms the habits of the libertine under the able tutelage of his delighted old grandfather. Until the hour of the old Spaniard's death, he lavishes his entire affections upon the boy and takes him on various wild debauches until age unfits the Centaur for such unseemly revels. When Madariaga dies, the estate is divided and the two families leave the Argentine the von Hartoots to go to Berlin and the Desnoyers, later to Paris. In the French capital, Julio's father establishes his family in a luxurious palace, his vast wealth being expended upon collecting curios. He buys a castle on the Marne which he fits up with his collected antiques. Julio, however, has inherited many of his grandfather's wild characteristics. He opens a studio where he paints pictures. He also becomes the leader of the smart dancing set and instructor in the intricate steps of the Tango, which he had learned in the dance halls of Argentine. After engaging in this aimless Bohemian existence for some time he fails genuinely in love with Marguerite Laurier, the youthful wife of a French Senator of double her age. Youth calling to youth, Marguerite returns Julio's love which eventually leads to a separation from her husband. A divorce is under process of arrangement when war takes a hand in shaping the destinies of all the characters in this vital story.

Laurier, being a patriotic Frenchman, at once enlists. Julio, considering himself a South American at first elects to remain in civil life, attending to his painting. Marguerite, however, becomes a nurse. Julio becomes desperately unhappy and dissatisfied with the emptiness of his selfish existence. Gradually his patriotism for his father's country is aroused until it becomes a burning flame which burns away all the dross and sends him repentant to his father, wearing the uniform of a soldier of France. In the meanwhile, the elder Desnoyers has journeyed from Paris to his castle on the Marne which he reaches at about the time of the arrival of the Germans at this historic spot. A tremendous battle ensues. Desnoyers is caught in the bombardment in which his castle is wrecked. He himself becomes the captive of the invaders. The remaining part of the castle is turned into the headquarters of the officer in command, who proceeds to make himself comfortable in his German way. The wine cellars are emptied in a debauch of shocking magnitude; the inmates of the castle, masculine and feminine, are treated brutally and bestially. When Desnoyers attempts to protect the young daughter of his lodgekeeper from the outrages of a German officer he is bundled away into his own cellar where he is locked up by his own nephew, one of the von Hertrotts who is serving as an Oberlieutenant on the German staff. While imprisoned in his cellar, Desnoyers hears the sound of approaching French artillery in a counter attack which drives the Germans from the ruined castle. After the arrival of the French, Desnoyers is released and for several days he serves as best he can with the French army. He returns to Paris a broken man. Broken physically and mentally, but he is consoled in the knowledge that his son is now fighting for the country he loves. Julio and his eldest cousin during the next day's fighting meet in the dark in a narrow trench between the lines. Each has been sent upon a dangerous mission. They recognize each other but kinship is wiped out in deadly enmity. Both fire at close range and fall dead side by side. Marguerite's husband, Laurier, has been blinded in action and his helplessness has reawakened her coul and conscience so that she devoted her life to him.

Through this entire marvelous story passes the Chrislike figure of Tchernoff, the Russian, Tchernoff, the Revelator, who visualizes for those who will listen the figures which gave this great story its name, the figures of the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, War, Famine, Pestilence and Death.

Like the true visions seen by St. John as described in the Book of Revelations, these grim horsemen appear upon the screen at times bearing their warning and message to the struggling nations. It is this Tchernoff who meets Julio's family upon the battlefield after the war, when they are searching for their son's grave. He leads them to Julio's last resting place. "You knew him?" they asked. "I knew them all," replied the stranger pointing to the long rows of little white crosses.

REVIVAL TO CONTINUE UNTIL WEDNESDAY NIGHT

An audience that taxed the capacity of the building attended the revival meeting at the Christian church last night and heard Dr. Kellems' sermon on "The Unpardonable Sin." The evangelist held the audience in rapt attention for an hour while he gave the scriptural teaching with regard to this sin.

There were seventeen responses to the invitation at last night's serives and twelve yesterday morning, making twenty-nine for the day. This brings the total of additions of the local campaign to two hundred.

It was decided at last night's services to continue the meeting until Wednesday night. There will be no service tonight because of the Edison Tone-test, but Dr. Kellems will preach the second sermon on "The Unpardonable Sin" on Tuesday night. Dr. Kellems will preach both Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

It is planned that Wednesday night all new converts will be seated in a body and the services will be in special honor to them. It is hoped that all recently added will be present.

There were two hundred and seventeen in the Men's Class yesterday morning and two hundred and thirty-six women in their various classes. The Loyal Berean Class taught by Miss Fannie Hope is in a contest and their attendance yesterday morning was ninety-one.

The sermon last night was by far the strongest appeal the evangelist has made since the meeting started. All out of Christ could not help but be startled by the strong scriptural arguments given with reference to the unpardonable sin.

"If it is possible for men to commit that sin today, they should know what it is and how it may be committed," declared the evangelist. "The gospel writers declared that this sin against the Holy Spirit could not be forgiven in this world or in the world to come and it is designated in another place as the 'Eternal Sin.' The scripture plainly teaches that 'His Spirit shall not only strive with man.'

"We are admonished not to harden our hearts against the Gospel. If I should with some sharp instrument pluck my eyes out of my body there would be no avenue of approach for light to enter in. The sun would continue to shine, light would be all about me, but because my eyes were out and my blind condition I could not enjoy it. The man who resists the Gospel of Christ may after a while come to the place when his Spiritual eyes will be blinded and the light of the Gospel of Christ cannot enter into his soul.

"When you have continued in sin until that condition is brought about, just then have you committed 'the Unpardonable Sin,' though you may live to hear many and many invitations after that.

"God is willing to forgive any man who is able and willing to come to Him in obedience. But man by continual rejection of Christ may so harden his heart that he cannot turn away from his sin and let the gospel have its affect upon him."

Dr. Kellems gave some illustrations out from his own experience of men who had undoubtedly committed this sin. In his strong and heart searching appeal he admonished all out of Christ that if they felt conviction of sin not to resist it lest by this one more resistance they might bring themselves to the place where never again could they feel the power of the gospel in their souls.

The large audience by vote last night seemed to be anxious to hear the second sermon upon "The Unpardonable Sin" and Dr. Kellems has announced that it would be preached on Tuesday night.

SORT OF AN OBJECT LESSON

Diner Evidently of Opinion That Parson Had Evolved Something of a New Wrinkle.

A clergyman was very fond of a particularly hot brand of pickles, and finding great difficulty in procuring them at hotels when traveling, invariably carried a bottle with him.

One day, when dining at a restaurant with his pickles in front of him, a stranger sat down at the same table. Soon he asked the clergyman to pass the pickles.

The divine did as he was requested, and in a few seconds had the satisfaction of seeing the stranger watering at the eyes and gasping for breath.

"I see by your dress," said the man when he had recovered, "that you are a parson."

"I am sir."

"I suppose you preach?"

"Yes, about twice a week, usually."

"Do you ever preach about Hades?" inquired the stranger.

"Why, yes. Sometimes I deem it my duty to remind my congregation of eternal punishment."

"I thought so," said the stranger; "but you are the first of your class I ever met who carried samples."

PLAY PIANO WITH HAMMERS

The orchestra of freak instruments which plays on the Italian roof garden of the Criterion restaurant, London, has been re-enforced by a wildly eccentric piano, which is 12 feet long, and has to be played with hammers.

This is the closest description which one can give of the Marimba, the modern successor of the barbaric gourd piano of the native races of Peru and Chili.

Its keyboard is constructed of a series of rosewood bars, under which are fixed rosewood metal resonators. The player smites these with his hammers as vigorously as though he were breaking stones, and they yield notes deep and sonorous as those of a cathedral organ.

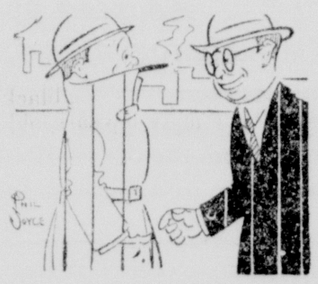
Mosque in American City.

The followers of Mohammed in Detroit recently took part in a double celebration, the dedication of their new mosque, the only one in the United States, and the observance of the feast of Id-ul-Fitr, which marks the end of a 30-day fast. The Mohammedan mosque is still incomplete. Rugs were strewn over the earth floor, and on these Detroit's Moslems, with shoes removed, knelt in prayer. In the line of march that bore the banners of America, Arabia, Syria and Turkey, were the sheiks Kaziel Bizzy and Hussien Karoub and the special missionary to America, Dr. Mufti Muhammad Sadiq, lately come from India. Bedouins in native costume followed the sheiks. Something of the spirit of Christmas with its greetings, its exchange of presents and mutual well-wishing followed the return of the procession to the mosque. The celebration continued for three days.



HER FONDNESS

"Is your wife fond of moving pictures?"

"I should say she is. Scarcely a week goes by she doesn't make me get on the stepladder and change 'em all about."

Long Spell of Sleeping Sickness.

An extraordinary case of sleeping sickness is reported from Habourdin, near Lille, France, where Mme. Delabarge has been in a state of lethargy for five months. She gave birth to a child last month and the doctors expected this would put an end to her long period of sleep, but she still slumbered on unchanged. The child was in every way normal and in excellent health.

Big Prices for Old Laces.

Old lace sequestrated during the war as the property of a German has been sold at the Central Paris auction room and record prices were reached. An Eighteenth century altar front in Venetian point, just six feet in length, fetched $6,340, or $3,170 per yard. A small tablecloth with Venetian point fetched $1,600.

First World Poultry Congress.

Nine countries have already accepted invitations to take part in the first world's poultry congress, which is to be held at The Hague next September.

NOTED MEN MAKE PLEA FOR RED CROSS

That the American Red Cross is a non-sectarian and non-political organization is evident from the many letters received in Washington recently from men of national and international prominence, congratulating the new Chairman of the Red Cross Central Committee, Judge John Barton Payne, on his appointment to the head of the organization. Messages were received from President Harding, Vice-President Coolidge, General John J. Pershing, Chief Justice of the United States William Howard Taft, Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes, His Eminence Cardinal Dougherty, the Surgeon General of the Army General M. W. Ireland, Secretary Denby of the Navy, from Bishop William F. McDowell of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Polish Minister, Prince Casimer Lubomirski, His Eminence Cardinal O'Connell, Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, Right Reverend Bishop Daniel S. Tuttle Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church in America, Kathleen Booth of the Salvation Army, Secretary of Labor James A. Davis, Secretary Andrew W. Mellon of the Treasury, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise of New York, and from others of equal note. Letters from Cardinals Dougherty and O'Connell follow:

"His Excellency, the President of the United States having declared by proclamation that the Annual Membership Roll Call of the American Red Cross shall begin on Armistice Day and continue until November 24th, I deem it a duty to exhort all our citizens to enroll themselves in this admirable organization, which, for many years past, and especially during the World War, has rendered to mankind such noble services and benefactions.

"In times of peace, it has come to the rescue of the victims of pestilence, famine, fire, floods, and other great calamities; and it strives to devise and carry on measures for preventing the causes of suffering.

"In war, it has been a medium of communication between the American people and their Army and Navy; and it has cared for the sick and wounded throughout the world, irrespective of race and creed.

"I bespeak for it a wide membership.

(Signed)
D. CARD. DOUGHERTY,
Archbishop of Philadelphia.

"The American Red Cross is an organization of which our country is justly proud. It is dedicated to a noble purpose, the alleviation of suffering mankind, and the story of its achievements speaks for itself.

"In order that this organization may continue faithful service and bring assistance to suffering humanity in the various crises which arise from time to time, it needs constant encouragement and support.

"It has ever been the just and proud boast of America that she has never been wanting in generosity in any need, and I am confident that American citizens will not fail to respond as they have in the past to help the Red Cross to continue its ministrations to the unfortunate and suffering.

(Signed)
W. CARD. O'CONNELL."

KANSAS JUNIORS DOING BIG COMMUNITY WORK

The Junior Red Cross of Republic County, Kansas, has been especially active during the last year in organizing classes conducted under the Junior plan, such as health work in the schools, patriotic program, community play, making of toys and hospital supplies, civic training, making of Easter cards and equipment, and preparing hot lunches for school children.

FLOUR SACK CAUSES FIRST-AID CALL

An odd case of first-aid was required of a newly installed Red Cross nurse at Bendena, Kan., recently, according to advices from that town.

A deaf man, who was endeavoring to help the woman clerk in a grocery store carry a sack of flour from the store room to his waiting automobile, inadvertently caught the drawstring in her finger and dragged it instead of the sack of flour across the floor. His back was turned, and being too deaf to hear her cries, he did not know of the accident until he turned to lift the flour into his machine. The hook was so deeply imbedded in the woman's hand that surgery was necessary to remove it, but the Red Cross nurse was able to relieve her pain with first-aid at once while a surgeon was being summoned.

Red Cross nurses in the chapters where public health work is conducted are constantly having just such calls as this, and frequently find themselves the only available help in serious emergencies. In many of the Red Cross Chapters employing public health nurses, the work is financed by the receipts from the annual Roll Call. The Roll Call this year will take place November 11 to 24 and will be simultaneous throughout the United States.

gold in the country. There are very large deposits in the banks and it would appear that the prices of raw material have been on the whole entirely liquidated. The agricultural resources and the industrial ability of the nation were never larger than at the present time.

"There is waiting a great deal of construction work of a private and public nature. The great railroads of the country need increased facilities and new equipment. There is need of housing and public buildings. The construction of highways and other public works are in contemplation in enormous quantities. The demand of the people and the consumption of merchandise is almost beyond comprehension.

"There is in all of this the foundation for a sound business revival, but, in order to secure it, it will be necessary for a complete cooperation of all the elements that go into production and industry. It is not going to be possible for any one element to prosper at the expense of others."

However, the practice of looking to Washington as the fountain-head of prosperity, perhaps a habit which Americans developed during the war, when stress of the struggle made it necessary for the government to have at its disposal every resource of the country is demoralizing to the industrial morale, as Mr. Coolidge sees it.

"The government can help to promote a condition of prosperity," Mr. Coolidge stated. "It can readjust taxation so that it will bear more equitably upon all the people; it can give protection from a ruinous foreign competition. It can provide security for life and property and an administration of justice without which there can be no economic success. But after all this has been done; it is not enough.

"The business of the country depends upon private initiative. It depends upon good-will and a desire to serve more than upon a ruinous competition and a desire for gain.

"American prosperity has always been the result of cooperation rather than of competition.

"It has meant cooperation between employer and employe, each working for the welfare of the other; the cooperation between buyer and seller, each seeking to promote the best business interests of the other."

TOOK REINDEER TO ENGLAND

A hundred years ago it was thought that the mountain forests of Great Britain might be colonized by reindeer from Lapland, and an account was given in 1821 in an issue of the Observer, London, of the extraordinary sagacity displayed by them when a number were brought to England at the instigation of an eminent naturalist, Mr. Bullock. The herd was accompanied by a Laplander, to whom the animals were attached and to whose wishes they were usually obedient. All went well till they arrived at the place of embarkation, when the herdsman invited the deer to follow him to the boat. When the leader of the herd put his foot upon the float leading to the vessel he started back in alarm. It was the first unsteady ground he had ever trod. Fresh invitations to follow the herdsman and fresh investigations followed, the whole herd looking on and watching the proceedings, placing entire confidence in the captain, not attempting to move till he gave them a signal that all was well. After a time he seemed to be reassured and in a majestic manner entered the vessel, where he trod upon every plank and carefully examined everything. When he had satisfied himself that it was perfectly safe, he uttered a kind of snort, when the hitherto passive herd bounded into the boat and in three minutes all had embarked. The account continues that the vessel was overloaded and the intelligent beast indicated this to his followers. "Were we not assured of the fact, we could hardly credit it," the reporter continues. "As he had indicated other things, he also intimated this to his followers. No sooner was this done than the indivi- ... they he appealed to leaped ... other boat."

The experiment did not ... cess, but the marked ... the reindeer made a ... upon the public.

TO DETERMINE HOGS' MERITS BY EXPERIMENTAL BREEDING

Although there is a higher percentage of purebred hogs in the country than of any other class of live stock, there is still much room for improvement. And there is much to be known concerning the relative merits of scrubs, crossbreds, and purebreds. To make some of the points clearer the Animal Husbandry Division of the United States Department of Agriculture is starting a breeding and feeding experiment that will contrast the results of using scrub, crossbred and purebred boars on scrub and crossbred sows. If appropriations provide sufficient money it may be that the effect of using crossbred and scrub boars on purebred sows will be studied.

Ten crossbred sows, of various breed mixtures, and 10 scrub sows of the razor-back kind will be used. Half of each of those groups will be bred to a purebred boar; half of the first group will be bred to a crossbred, and half of the other group will be carried on from generation to generation. Some of the offspring will be fed out and some of them will be kept for breeding before being fed out. Shoats from the different lots will be put in feed lots together and fed alike so that a fair comparison can be made. Some of these scrubs and crossbreds will be compared in feeding trials with purebreds raised on the department's experimental farm at Beltsville, Md. Some will be put into different experimental lots on various feeds.

Nearly everybody thinks the purebred is superior to the scrub, but there is disagreement among farmers about the merits of purebred and crossbred feeders. The department hopes that in due time its experiments will give results that will answer any doubts.

Morphology

"Man's place is in nature. He is subject to the same laws as all other creatures and he is subject to the same processes of change and adaptation as all organisms are. The human race is a group of closely allied species derived from a common stock. That man is connected with the lower animals is shown in every bone and muscle, every blood vessel and gland, and in every phase of structure, even including his brain and nervous system. The actual physical differences between man and the anthropoid apes are very slight, while the mental differences are enormous. There is more physical difference between a gorilla and a South American monkey than between a gorilla and a man.

"The chief differences between man and the gorilla are: first, man walks erect; second, his great toe is not opposable to the other toes and his other toes are not prehensile; third, articulate speech; fourth, higher reasoning power. But some apes walk almost upright, touching their knuckles to the ground only when they run. The muscles are the same, except in the amount of their development. The hind feet are structurally alike. In some lower races of men the great toe stands apart from the others.

"Some men, like animals, can move their scalps and ears. The wisdom teeth in the Australians are their largest and strongest grinders, as they are with the animals.

Difference in Brains

"The mental differences between man and the gorilla are correlated with the differences in size and high degree of specialization of the brains. The largest human brain weighed sixty-six ounces, the smallest thirty-two ounces, while the largest simian brain weighed twenty-four ounces. The fineness of structure and the difference in quality between the brains of the ape and the man are similar to the differences in structure and quality between an Ingersoll and an Elgin watch, and when God wanted to place upon the earth a human soul, created in God's own image, he chose the animal which he had produced with a brain sufficiently prepared to do the work of the human mind.

"The manner of reproduction is the same with the man-like apes and man. Both have a single disk-like placenta, while in the lower monkeys the embryonis life is developed by two opposed placentas.

"While the blood serum of man poisons the red blood corpuscles of other animals, it does not poison and destroy those of the simian apes. This immunity exists only between closely allied species, such as the hare and the rabbit, the horse and donkey, the dog and wolf, from which it is evident that man and the man-like apes have nearly identical blood.

Embryology

"Embryology, emphasizes the common origin of man with the higher animals. The embryo, or unborn children, of man and the ape develop precisely in the same way. There is a period in embryonic development of man and reptiles and birds when they have gill slits at the side of the throat, like the sharks, which are evidence of descent from a fish-like ancestry.

"Ape-like traits show up in the embryonis development of the child which later disappear. For example at one period of the child's development, before birth, it is covered with long hairs. These disappear before birth. The feet curve upward, and even in the small babe, we see him possessing the power of placing the soles of his feet together like a monkey climbing a stick. When the child is only one inch long, the great toe projects at right angles from the side of the foot, as though it were a thumb. Babies further show our derivation in their great grasping power. They can often sustain their weight from one-half to two minutes by grasping a stick, at which time their thighs and legs are bent upward in the same possession that the legs of the monkey assume when he is swinging from the limbs of the tree tops.

Man's Embryo Has Tail.

"At one stage in the embryonic life of the human being he possesses a tail, which is longer than the legs, and admits of being moved by muscles. This tail in man, of course, is absorbed and dwindles like that of the tadpole, but in the case of the monkey it is fixed. The vermiform appendix is more developed in the embryo than in the adult. Wiedersheim has recorded 180 structural reminiscenses of man's descent from the lower animals. These show a common origin of man and the apes.

Paleontology.

"Paleontology has comparatively little to offer in proof of men and apes common ancestry, but what it does say is decisive proof. The life habits of men and apes are particularly unfavorable for the preservation of their fossil remains, for they lived in thickets and underbrush. With man, instruments of stone, bone, bronze and iron mark the stages of his development. His fossil remains are confined almost wholly to bones buried in quicksand or the drippings of caves. From the pliocene in the Punjab of India, an extinct gorilla has been found, but of all the fossil primates the one of greatest interest is Pithecanthropus Erectus, found in the upper pliocene of Jave and described by Dr. Eugene DuBois. This is the 'last link' in human genealogy.

"This animal stood about five feet six inches high and had a brain capacity of one thousand cubic centimeters. The Veddah women of Ceylon and the Australian men, who stand only four feet nine inches high, have a brain capacity of one thousand cubic centimeters.

"Pithecanthropus Erectus, standing full nine inches taller than the smallest distinctly human being, if he had been altogether human, should have had a much larger brain capacity than the Veddah women and the Australian men. On the other hand, the largest ape brain is only six hundred cubic centimeters, so this being, Pithecanthropus Erectus stood midway between the apes and the men and from him two lines of descent have diverged, one toward man, the other toward the apes.

"All apples have been developed from the gnarly, bitter wild crab on the same tree. We may have bitter, puckery crabs on one limb and Grimes Goldens or Rome Beauties growing on another branch.

The Ascent Upward.

"Tracing the genealogy of man backward, assuming that he can be connected with the Old World man-like apes, and through them with the lemures, we can see their connection with the marsupils (kangaroos and o'possums) which are connected with the duckbills, ant-eaters and three-eyed lizards. Behind these are the male frogs and behind them the lung bearing fishes, which were derived from the sharks and the sharks are probably traceable to worms through the lampreys and the lancelets and possibly through the acorn tongue or balanoglossus, a creature which has not only a soft worm-like body, but also the gill slits and the beginning of a backbone or notochord. Possibly one form of worm life can or will be traced back to another until we derive all from the hydra and the amoeba and then that from the primitive monera, a tiny microscopic bit of protoplasm or living matter.

"With every step backward, the genealogy grows more problematical. But the gill slits and the notochord of the human embryo leave little doubt that man, with all the other animals having backbone, have had a fish-like ancestry. Man's place is in nature and the forces that are still acting on flowers and beasts are the forces which the Great Power back of the universe, which we call God, daily renew in the work of creation.

Objections Easy.

"Objections against the theory that man has descended from the lower forms of animal life have been raised, but it does not take a great mind to raise objections to everything. I once heard a man raise objections to the sun being imperfect. He said that it had spots on it, and it has and it is not a difficult matter to point them out. It is one thing to point out the spots on the sun, but it is another thing to get up there and shine like the sun. It is easier to point out the difficulties with which science has to contend than it is to propose a better explanation of the origin of man. Along the history of human thought we see the constant attempt to fasten each decaying belief in science to Christianity and declaring that it is orthodox. We now know that the sun does not move around the earth, that comets do have orbits, that valleys have been scooped out by water and ice, though these things have been bitterly denied in the name of religion. It was said that there could not be two continents, for God could not watch both at once. The Gods were local and they had to be worshipped in temples, for if the Gods were removed from temples they would be removed from sight, and that the beginning of things was only a few thousand years ago. But we know that these things are not true. It is not a mark of the high grade of intelligence to take offense at the difficulties of a given view and end by adopting another still more obnoxious to criticism."

HAVE POWER OVER THE METHOD OF SELECTION

Senatorial Committees To Determine Method of Choosing Delegates To Convention

Jefferson City, Mo., Nov. 7—District senatorial committees of the various political parties have complete jurisdiction over the method of selecting delegates to the district conventions for choosing candidates for the Constitutional convention, should the convention method be designated for choosing such candidates, according to an opinion rendered this week by Attorney General Jesse W. Barret.

The opinion was rendered by the Attorney General at the request of Secretary of State, Charles U. Becker, the question having been raised by the Missouri Constitutional Association as to whether or not there is a state law which will govern the election of members to the district conventions for nominating Constitutional Convention candidates.

Under the amendment to the constitution as adopted at the special election on August 2, the senatorial committees of the political parties have power to prescribe the method of electing district candidates to the Constitutional convention. In a former opinion, the Attorney General held that such district committees could not nominate the candidates themselves for only one candidate is permitted from each political party which would mean the election of the district delegates by the political committees. Attorney General held that the district delegates must be nominated either by primary or by convention.

The attorney general this week also expressed the opinion that qualified voters in cities where registration is required, have the right to sign petitions of candidates for delegate at large, without having registered.

Produce Review By Swift & Co.

On account of fine weather, good pasturage, and forage crops, a larger amount of cream has been delivered during the week than the corresponding week a year ago, with markets closing easier on butter. If this condition continues, lower prices may be expected.

There is every indication that a large crop of poultry will be marketed. Receipts are larger than required for current use, and the surplus is being placed in storage.

Prices on dressed poultry have been reported easier in the larger consuming centers and will probably be reflected in the producing territories.
